Jack and Harry were walking home from school when they walked past a forest. The sun was shining brightly and it was scorching hot.

Suddenly, Jack smelled something in the air. "Is that smoke?" he asked, terrified.

"Huh?" Harry sniffed the air too, "I can smell it too! It's coming from that direction!" He pointed to a tree in the distance.

The boys followed the smell to a big tree. When they saw it, they froze. The tree was on fire and it was sizzling. Jack and Harry could feel the burning heat.

"The fire is going to sweep through the forest!" Jack exclaimed.

Harry saw a house not far away. "There's a house!" he shouted, "Maybe we can get some help!"

Jack and Harry rushed to the house and knocked on the door. A woman opened the door. Jack immediately told her about the fire. After hearing what had happened, the woman invited Jack and Harry to go inside and promptly called the fire department.

Ten minutes later, some firemen arrived and put out the fire. A fireman praised Jack and Harry, "Because of you two, the forest has been saved. You two did a good job calling for help." Jack and Harry just grinned.
